Theories of unbalanced growth focus on the implications from unequal sectoral growth and indicate the strategies for planning and promoting different sectors of the economy for maximizing total economic gain. It is possible to view this issue by using the approaches of equi-marginal sub-regional productives with a purpose to maximize regional productivity. The scarce resources of the regional economy should be allocated as to achieve maximum regional economic welfare, which in turn can be realized by improving productivity in different sub-regions. This book presents various research papers on regional disparity and other related issues.

This book comprehensively deals with sustainable development in various fields, which inter alia, affects the social system in very field of activates viz: education, poverty, population growth, religion, politics etc. Collective papers from the experts in their own disciplines have incorporated in this book.

This book based on micro level research focuses on fertility studies of certain communities brings out the determinants of fertility by castes, religious group and tribal. Each of these communities has its own socio-cultural and religious factors, which have significant influence on the fertility behavior.

Care and support is one of the major challenges to be faced by the elderly in near future. In order to address this issue information about care and support received by the elderly has been examined in this book. Care and support viz: emotional, economic and physical, received by elderly and the dimensions of care and support extended by the caregivers, problems have been explored and presented in this book.
VEGETABLE CARVING – WASTE OF VITAL NUTRIENTS
by
Dr. Anuradha Subramanian, Associate Professor, Dept. of Nutrition & Dietetics, Vellalar College for women, Erode 12, Tamil Nadu, anusai1986@gmail.com

Vegetables and fruits are the rich sources of vitamins and minerals called as protective foods, which play a vital role in preventing deficiency syndromes, and make the body free from infection. According to ICMR, per capita consumption of vegetables should be 100g per day but in India, it is below 30g. Recently in all functions, ceremonies, exhibitions etc. vegetables and fruits are wasted by making different shapes, figures, and designs to attract the public and to show the status of the concern. It is not a healthy point of view to reuse the carved vegetables for eating purposes since it is formed by using chemicals, preservatives, equipments etc.

In olden times, the vegetables were packed in banana leaves or covers, keeping in open place with racks and trays to show variety, size, color, organic mode of cultivation. After the closure of exhibition, the vegetables could be utilized for cooking purposes hence the wastage was found to be less. The price of the vegetables and fruits are so high for the poor to avail minimum vegetables and fruits for their livelihood. Hence more number of children are affected by deficiency syndromes like scurvy, bleeding gum, brittle teeth and nails, skin pigmentation, Bigot’s spot etc. and infectious diseases such as fever, cold, running nose, diarrhoea, constipation and ulceration in oral cavity.

To find the remedy for this sustainable problem, it is better to use artificial flowers, vegetables, fruits etc. for more times without labour or minimum labour power. Otherwise using of vegetables and fruits without any damage as a whole portion to make sure it can be edible after the purpose is over. Moreover, vegetables contain photochemical, antioxidants, lycopene and fiber, which are essential for all body mechanism and prevent damage of cells. Concluding this issue, usage of vegetables should be minimized for carving and decorating purposes. In other words, make the designs, requiring minimum loss and reusable of vegetables for edible purposes.
